What is CE mark?

The CE mark is a guarantee that the product complies with all the essential requirements of the European New Approach Directives that apply to it and that a conformity assessment has been carried out to prove compliance with essential requirements.

One CE mark on a product indicates that the product complies with all the essential requirements of all directives applicable to that product.

Although it is often believed that the CE mark indicates high-quality products, the CE mark is not a guarantee of quality. The CE mark is not a commercial mark and does not indicate the origin of the product.

What is the European New Approach Directive?

The New Approach encompasses a set of Directives that prescribe the essential requirements that every product must meet.

Essential requirements are most easily met through the application of harmonized European standards published in the "Official Journal of the European Union."

How to identify which directives apply to a product?

Identifying applicable directives is carried out based on the product's characteristics, technical specifications and intended use. A product may be subject to one or more directives as all aspects of risk must be covered. For the identified directives, it is necessary to identify the harmonized standards applicable to the product. Based on the requirements of applicable harmonized standards, it is assessed which essential performances the product must meet, and which basic tests need to be carried out on materials, components, and the product.

Which products are marked with the CE mark?

The CE mark must be affixed to all new products covered by at least one European New Approach Directive, produced in the European Union or third countries, used products imported from third countries, and products already on the Single market that have been significantly modified to be considered as new products.
